

So enjoying the great outdoors in the Belfast Hills is great for your health – and fabulous, cheap fun for all the family.

The Belfast Hills also boast many archaeological sites revealing prehistoric Belfast Hills and farming off the land. They hold a rich industrial heritage along the rivers and streams that powered their mills.

Enjoy gorgeous wildflower fields of bluebell and orchid, look out for rabbits, foxes and badgers. Spot birds like meadow pipits and skylarks. You might see Irish hare, red grouse or curlew, which are priority species earmarked in need of conserving.

Featuring lovely trails with stunning views, forays into native flora and fauna and fascinating wildlife, habitat and biodiversity, there's lots to do and see when out and about in the Belfast Hills.

The Belfast Hills Partnership runs activities for all ages throughout the year, and publishes an events programme. Pick up a programme from various public places including libraries, tourist offices and also see www.belfasthills.org

A mosaic of rolling hills, wooded river valleys and small fields make up the unique landscape of the Belfast Hills.
